- Be confidential. Be careful not to reveal confidential or proprietary information about Adelphi students, employees or alumni. Adhere to all applicable University, federal and NCAA privacy and confidentiality policies.
- Protect property. Follow copyright, fair use and intellectual property rights. In some cases, content posted to a social media site becomes the property of the platform operator.
- Protect the brown and gold. The Adelphi logo cannot be modified or used for personal endorsements, and the Adelphi name cannot be used to promote a product, cause, political party or candidate.
- Respect Adelphi. Remain professional and in good taste, and protect Adelphi’s institutional voice. As a representative of Adelphi, avoid pranks and postings that could be misinterpreted. Ask your supervisor or IMG if you are unsure. Respect university time and property—Adelphi computers and time on the job are reserved for University-related business.
- Respect others. Social media sites are designed for two-way communication, and content contributed to a social media site may encourage comments or discussion of opposing ideas. As an administrator, you can and should respond when relevant, but consider how your response may reflect on you, your department and the University. If you are unsure about posting something or responding to a comment, ask your supervisor. You may remove comments libelous or offensive by standards of the Adelphi community, but do not censor posts with which you personally disagree. Also, avoid criticizing other people and institutions. Doing so may alienate you from your audience, reflect poorly on Adelphi or escalate into a conflict.
- Stay accurate. Get the facts straight before posting them on social media sites. When possible, link back to the original source. Review content for grammatical and spelling mistakes. If you make an error, correct it quickly and visibly. This will earn you respect in the online community.
- Remain transparent. Be honest about your identity. Because no individual departmental social media site represents all of Adelphi, clearly link pages, account names, images and content to a particular department or unit within Adelphi. If you choose to post about Adelphi on your personal time, please identify yourself as an Adelphi student, faculty or staff member. Never hide your identity for the purpose of promoting Adelphi through social media.
- Be safe. Be cautious of "phishers." Phishing is the attempt to gain control of a personal or institutional social media site by deceiving a user into revealing the account’s username and password. Monitor your social media sites carefully to ensure you notice quickly if an unauthorized person gains access—the larger your audience, the more tempting your site becomes as a target.
- Connect thoughtfully. Connecting to other social media members and sites builds credibility and community but could also give the unintended impression that your site endorses a certain cause, group or person. Consider carefully who you “friend,” “follow,” link to or allow into your site and to what extent you will allow comments. Help the Adelphi community stay connected by linking back to the Adelphi homepage and other Adelphi social media sites. When possible, link to an Adelphi news source instead of an outside source.
Guidelines for Personal Use

- Think before posting. Privacy does not exist in social media. Public posts are indexed in search engines, and private comments can be forwarded or copied and easily made available to the public. Use privacy settings to restrict personal information on otherwise public accounts, but be aware of the limited protection this provides. Remember that what you post on your personal page could haunt you professionally.

- Be authentic. Be honest about your identity and don’t misrepresent another person. If you identify yourself as an Adelphi faculty or staff member in a personal post, also make clear that your views are your own that you are not formally representing Adelphi.

  A common practice among individuals who write about the industry in which they work is to include a disclaimer on their site, usually on their “About Me” page. If you discuss higher education on your own social media site, we suggest you include a sentence similar to this:

  “The views expressed on this [blog, Web site] are mine alone and do not necessarily reflect the views of Adelphi University.”

  This is particularly important if you are a department head or administrator.

- Take the high ground. If you identify your affiliation with Adelphi in your comments, readers will associate you with the university, even with the disclaimer that your views are your own. Remember that you’re most likely to build a high-quality following if you discuss ideas and situations civilly.

- Be a valued member. If you join a social media site like a Facebook group or comment on someone’s blog, make sure you are contributing valuable insights. Don’t post information about topics like Adelphi events or a book you've authored unless you are sure it will be of interest to readers. Self-promoting behavior is viewed negatively and can lead to you being banned from websites or groups.

- Protect your identity. While you want to be honest about yourself, don’t provide personal information that scam artists or identity thieves could use against you. Don’t list your home address, telephone number, or e-mail address. Be aware of “phishers” or those who might try to hack your account, and reset your password in the event of a breach. Always log out of your account when using public computers.

- Be aware of liability. You are legally liable for what you post on your own site and on the sites of others. Individual bloggers have been held liable for commentary deemed to be proprietary, copyrighted, defamatory, libelous or obscene (as defined by the courts). Employers are increasingly conducting Web searches on job candidates before extending offers. Be sure that what you post today will not come back to haunt you.

- Protect the brown and gold. The Adelphi logo cannot be modified or used for personal endorsements, and the Adelphi name cannot be used to promote a product, cause, political party or candidate.

- Link back. You are welcome to link from your social media site to the Adelphi homepage and Adelphi social media sites.
Best Practices for Social Media Site Managers

- Plan first. Consider messages, audiences, goals and your strategy for keeping information timely. Some audiences may be on one social media platform and not another, and some sites provide more flexibility than others. It is time-consuming to maintain more than one social media site at a time so choose carefully. Creating a content calendar can also help organize postings and ensure that you won’t forget to post new content.

- Assign responsibility. When possible, identify an appointed employee or student, responsible for social media content and monitoring. If responsibility is not assigned, new content might not be posted, and the site will wither and die. As your site grows, you will also need someone familiar with the site to attest what is and isn’t working for your audience.

- Launch for success. A common misconception about social media is that if you build a site, people will automatically come. Fill your new site with content, so your site doesn’t feel empty. When you launch, announce it through your traditional channels: email, newsletter, and website. New audience members may not participate right away, but let them know you value their presence by sending them a welcome message or thank you for joining. Oftentimes, people don’t want to be the first to break the ice, so try and recruit friends or co-workers to stimulate the discussion.

- Interact with your audience. Social media is meant for two-way communication. You do not want to be a robot that only spits out content and does not reciprocate communication. People Google or read the news to get information, but people visit social media sites to interact with other people. Welcome new audience members, respond to comments, or follow up a posting with a question about the content. Engaging with your members will also make your site more valuable to them and keep them coming back.

- Monitor comments. Most people who maintain social media sites welcome comments—it builds credibility and community. Consider posting a disclaimer or comment policy to let audience members know what is and isn’t appropriate. On some social media platforms, you can set your site so that you can review and approve comments before they appear. This allows you to respond in a timely way. It also allows you to delete spam comments and to block any individuals who repeatedly post offensive or frivolous comments.

- Measure for results. Make use of analytics to evaluate posting activity and interaction within a social media site. Facebook has built-in analytics for pages. This tool helps you to refine your strategy and better understand your audience’s preferences and behaviors.

- Connect to the community. Help Adelphi keep its online community connected. If you currently have a social media site, contact Michael Wentz, Interactive Media Group (IMG) at (516) 877-3711 or e-mail mwentz@adelphi.edu, so we can list your site along with other Adelphi social media sites. Interactive Media Group will also assist you in reviewing multimedia to ensure its content represents Adelphi accurately and is in accordance with University identity guidelines. If your department or group plans to start using social media, consider contacting Interactive Media Group to coordinate with other Adelphi social media sites and content, discuss best practices, and for general assistance.
