Annual Report
2023
HONORS COLLEGE
Dear Friends of the Honors College,

The Honors College continues to thrive at Adelphi. Every fall, we are fortunate to bring in a new class of students who are excited to learn, and it is a privilege to watch them grow. The Honors College continues the practice of interviewing all prospective students and we are including more alumni as interviewers. We appreciate their commitment to our community and their thoughtfulness in selecting students who will bring their energy and curiosity to our classes.

This year, we are piloting a new program in the spirit of the Dean’s Circle. Each semester, six students are selected and join Nicole Rudolph, PhD, associate dean for student engagement in the Honors College and director of the Office of Prestigious Awards and Fellowships, to watch Council on Foreign Relations broadcasts and engage in a discussion about the readings that accompany the lecture. The conversations have been rich and well received by our students, who are keen to better understand the world around us.

In April 2023, the Northeast Regional Honors Council conference took place in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Five Honors College students joined Dean Rudolph and me at the event and presented the findings of their thesis research. They gave talks on panels, presented their work on posters and exhibited their art. The students, Melissa Garber ’24, Agustina Gentile ’23, Kyana Gordon ’24, Julia Smith ’23 and Daneliya Zholdasbekova ’23, did a stellar job of representing Adelphi and demonstrating the depth of their knowledge and passion for their subjects. In April 2024, a group of students will attend this regional conference with me in Albany, New York.

The goal of the Honors College remains to provide the most exceptional learning possible to Adelphi’s most academically ambitious students. The experience emphasizes interdisciplinary and intellectual creativity—you can see evidence of our ethos in this report.

This report details the contributions of the Honors College faculty and our students to Adelphi’s campus culture of intellectual inquiry and creative endeavors. Honors students embrace a passion for learning and asking questions, a commitment to social justice, an enthusiasm for exploring what is new to them and compassion toward their peers. The Honors College serves them by creating a community of academic rigor, cultural exploration and social bonding. Ultimately, we seek to cultivate joy and wonder in everyone who is part of the Honors community.

Honors College alumni, please share your updates with us by emailing us at honorscollege@adelphi.edu.

Sincerely,

Susan Dinan, PhD

“In all of our seminar classes, we are encouraged to think of concepts not just as existing in the world of academia, but how they can apply to the world we live in. For example, we don’t want to think only about where The Iliad came from. We also want to examine why the lessons we can gain from The Iliad are still relevant today.”

—Kevin Lubin ’22, music performance major
An Extraordinary Learning Experience

An Adelphi Honors College student is an exceptional student—both academically gifted and driven by a particular passion. A hallmark of our College is a deep understanding of each individual’s strengths and respect for their individual goals. They might be passionate about theater, be tech protégés, be driven to help others through social or service work, or have a lifelong dream to become a doctor, a nurse or a psychologist. The Honors College is a place where they can nourish their passion and find exceptional academic support to achieve their goals.

Our coursework is academically rigorous, like all honors colleges. The difference, at Adelphi, is the strong community-based learning within our Honors College, with strong bonds of support between students, and between students and faculty, to achieve objectives.

Seated at a long conference table in our seminar room, every voice is heard and diverse points of view are honored. We commit to these aims:

- Academic excellence
- Exceptional supplemental advisement regarding choice of major or minor, study abroad, senior theses and national fellowships
- Community-based learning to help each student reach their academic goals
- Cultural enrichment through events based in New York City

Our goal is to continue, at the highest level, the work of founding Dean Richard Garner, PhD, while welcoming fresh perspectives.

The Challenging—and Enlightening—Honors Curriculum

In a supportive, holistic learning environment, students in the Honors College engage in two yearlong courses designed to introduce them to important ideas and texts from around the world, culminating in individual thesis projects.

The Modern Condition—Students gain a foundation in the sciences, politics, economics, philosophy and the arts in a community environment, through collaborative projects, debate and inquiry, in and outside the classroom.

The Human Condition—Literature is the window to the world in this course, which builds on the foundations of The Modern Condition. Students read epics from different cultures around the globe to gain expertise in ideas from different personal, cultural and historical perspectives and aesthetic, political and religious contexts.

Advanced Seminars on Cutting-Edge Topics—These seminars allow students to not only specialize in their interests but to develop a critical and global concern for shaping the future of their field. Students pursue a subject of their choice, working closely with faculty from across the University whose courses grow out of their research interests.

Research and Thesis—The Honors Thesis applies what students have learned during the core courses through a yearlong thesis project, one that involves original, extended research. Putting their research and writing skills to good use, these concrete projects are then presented at Adelphi’s annual springtime Scholarship and Creative Works Conference, and some students also attend the Northeast Regional Honors Council conference.

The Honors College gave me such a wonderful foundation and prepared me so well for medical school—I owe my dedication to my education and my love of knowledge in part to the incredible role models that I met in my four years at Adelphi.\[quote\]

—Wendy Podany ’11, MD, attending physician, U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs, and assistant professor of medicine, Baylor College of Medicine
With becoming a physician comes a genuine love of learning and the development of critical thinking and analysis skills. I’m always striving to know more, and exploring topics outside of my usual STEM-oriented discipline is exciting to me. Being a part of the Honors College has been an unforgettable experience, and it is something that I will always treasure.

World-Class Honors College Faculty

Exceptional professors make our exceptional students more so:

Craig Carson, PhD, Associate Dean for Academic Affairs
Dr. Carson received his doctorate in comparative literature from the University of California, Irvine, and is a former Harper-Schmidt Fellow at the University of Chicago. He has also taught at the University of Paris 10 at Nanterre.

Nicole Rudolph, PhD, Associate Dean for Student Engagement
Dr. Rudolph, who earned a PhD in French Studies at New York University, graduated with a BA in American History and in French from the University of Pittsburgh. She also holds an MA in French from Pitt, an MA in French Studies from New York University and a master’s degree in social sciences from the École Normale Supérieure and l’École des Hautes Études en Sciences Sociales in Paris.

Before joining the Honors College in 2009, she was associate professor in Adelphi’s Department of Languages, Literatures and Cultures, and held a joint appointment in the Department of History. Prior to coming to Adelphi, she was the director of the Maison Française at Columbia University.

Currently, she also serves as the Director of the University’s Office of Prestigious Awards and Fellowships.

The Honors College is where I found myself. I developed passions I didn’t know I had, met friends I’d have for a lifetime, was given the support of terrific professors and I had the chance to grow intellectually.”

—Danielle Mebert ‘04, MA ’05, MFA ’11, EdD, manager, academic advising, New York University
The instructors engage the class in difficult but extremely interesting and engaging conversations, so I enjoy having both of them at once. I appreciate that they are teaching me to think more deeply about topics including science, nature, climate change, capitalism and religion on a deeper level than I knew I was capable of. One of the most interesting things I’ve learned from this class is that many global issues are narrative issues at their core. For instance, in our discussion of Genesis, we considered that because nature was used to punish man, people grew to see it as an obstacle. This can explain the depletion and abuse we see today.”
—Heather Gittleson, junior neuroscience major

Honors College Seminar—Narratives From a Changing Planet

In Fall 2023, Dean Carson and Professor Mariano Torras, PhD, chair of the Finance and Economics Department, co-taught a seminar entitled Narratives From a Changing Planet. According to Dean Carson, “Professor Torras and I designed the class to be experimental in both form and content in order to address—as the title of the class itself suggests—the changing nature of our contemporary world: that includes not only climate change, but also changing technology (especially AI, the use of which we have integrated in the class assignments), and the structure and purpose of the modern university classroom.”

According to Dr. Torras, “Especially noteworthy to me was the section on food—where it seems many students had been unaware just how reliant food production is on fossil fuels—and one class session on car culture—in which it seemed the students unexpectedly had even more to say about the harm that automobiles inflicted on society and community than on the natural environment. I also enjoyed the one or two occasions where my esteemed colleague and I clearly disagreed on or differently interpreted a particular text, not because of the disagreement itself but because of the opportunity afforded to the students to see nuance in action, i.e., “If our professors disagree, there must be something more to the matter...”

In the course description, Dean Carson and Dr. Torras argue that “the stories or narratives that we tell ourselves matter—often much more than we realize. While they are undoubtedly shaped by history, narratives themselves often play the catalyzing role in creating historical change. In this seminar, we will explore diverse narratives from philosophy, theology, literature and political economy and consider their influence on past events, as well as their potential in directing us to a more hopeful future.”
Honors Beyond the Classroom

The Honors College is a community that puts experiential learning over siloed thinking, branching out into a variety of campus and professional avenues to absorb, discuss and reflect.

Cultural Events in NYC—With New York City a short train ride away, Honors students have long taken advantage of its museums, theaters and concert halls. In Spring 2023, students visited the Asia Society to see the exhibition Comparative Hell: Arts of Asian Underworlds, attended Some Like It Hot, The Sign in Sidney Brustein’s Window, Camelot and, at the Metropolitan Opera, Champion. The Honors College organized an eating tour in Jackson Heights. In Fall 2023, students saw the Judy Chicago Retrospective at the New Museum. They returned to the opera to see X: The Life and Times of Malcolm X and also saw Translations, Arcadia and Sweeney Todd.

Dean’s Circles—Students join with faculty members to discuss books, including Documents (BOA, 2019), written by Professor Jan-Henry Gray. Students also read A Doll’s House with Dean Carson and saw the production at the Hudson Theater.

World Affairs Fellows—The Honors College is piloting a new program in 2023–2024. Each semester, six students are selected and join Dean Rudolph to watch Council on Foreign Relations broadcasts and engage in discussions about the readings that accompany the lecture.

On-Campus Social Events—Honors students enjoy informal weekly tea-time chats with a member of the Honors College faculty, and the Honors Student Council organizes paint, movie and craft night events.

Honors Student Council—The Honors student governing body develops leadership skills in students and has an immediate impact on campus life.

Internships—Honors College students participate in the Jaggar Community Fellows Program, the Disney College Program and other internships near and far.
We Deeply Appreciate Our Donors

There continues to be considerable need among our students. The Honors College is very grateful to our loyal alumni who contribute to the scholarship funds created by founding Dean Richard Garner, PhD. Every semester, the Honors College is able to support excellent students with additional funds, allowing them to focus more attentively on their studies, work fewer hours and worry less about the cost of their education.

Alumni of the Honors College have helped the staff and faculty interview prospective students for the past few years. We have formalized this work by creating an Honors College Alumni Service Council, which allows us to better acknowledge the very valuable labor our graduates provide in helping us find curious and engaged learners to join our community.

Looking forward, we rely upon our donors to provide additional scholarships for students, and we also hope to create a fund to enable students of limited means to embrace the opportunity to study abroad. The Center for International Education provides students with a wide array of programs of study, and it is the goal of the Honors College to make these accessible to more of our students. Further, the Honors College seeks to develop a teaching fellows program to encourage a broader range of instructors, to offer interdisciplinary seminars and to embrace all that the campus and broader community have to offer.

Thank you for your support. It is with that help that we create a dynamic community of learners eager to embrace all that the campus and broader community have to offer.
The Honors College helped me increase comprehension and develop confidence, self-reflection and, most importantly, empathy. These are qualities that are indispensable when working in a clinical setting, as managing patients and their oral healthcare needs is a demanding task. Advice from my Honors College and chemistry professors and advisers was instrumental in helping me choose Columbia as my dental school.”

—Vinay Maddula ’19, biochemistry major, now studying at Columbia University College of Dental Medicine
