The Movement: BLM

➤ An International social movement, formed in the United States in 2013.

➤ Dedicated to fighting racism and anti-black violence, especially in the form of police brutality.

➤ Co-Founded as an online movement using the hashtag #BlackLivesMatter on social media, by three black community organizers Patrisse Khan-Cullors, Alicia Garza, and Opal Tometi, (after the acquittal of George Zimmerman in 2012 for the fatal shooting of an unarmed black teenager Trayvon Martin).

THE EFFECTS OF BLM:

Support for BLM falls while trust in law enforcement rises

Share of respondents who said they trust local police and law enforcement and the Black Lives Matter movement to promote justice and equality

Eleven months after Floyd's death, support for the Black Lives Matter movement has fallen, while America's trust in law enforcement has risen. Sixty-nine percent of Americans, according to a USA Today/Ipsos survey from March, now trust local police and law enforcement to promote justice and equal treatment of all races versus 56 percent who felt the same way last June.

THE EFFECTS OF BLM:

A majority of white people have never supported the movement. Support peaked at 43 percent last June, just

. Since then, white Americans' support for the movement has dipped back down to roughly where it was before Floyd's death and is currently at 37 percent.

Most white Americans don't support BLM

Share of respondents who say they support or oppose the Black Lives Matter movement, from April 25, 2017, to April 10, 2021, by race

Does not include respondents who said they were "unsure" or "neither support nor oppose."

School to Prison Pipeline

Melissa Alcaide

School to Prison Pipeline

- Youth who are faced with punitive punishment during school are more likely to end up incarcerated in the future
- Research finds that the punishment chosen for students may predict negative future outcomes

How this problem affects the community

- 1/3 of students in the US are suspended by the end of high school
- Department of Education notes that suspensions have increased even though violence and offenses have decreased since the 1980
- The rise in suspensions lead to negative outcomes in addition to jail time like low self-esteem, poor academic performance, anxiety, and delinquency
- Zero tolerance policies from the 1990s forward lead to the up rise in suspensions
- Life course perspective finds that a student's early introduction to the criminal justice system will be met with negative outcomes such as incarceration and further implications with the law (Hemez et al., 2020).
- Schools allow School Resource Officers (SRO) to arrest students which makes it easier for students to obtain a criminal record

Who is affected?

- Boys are more likely to receive suspension than girls by 3.1 times
- Black students, even though making up only 15% of the student population, received 32.5% in school suspensions, 46% more than on out of school suspensions, and 34.7% of in school arrests (McCarter et al., 2019)

- Schools are an important link between the juvenile criminal justice system and further mass incarceration
- Racial disparities continue to affect the system

CHANGE: What can be done?

- The Obama Administration worked with schools to lessen their discipline policies and use suspension as a last ditch effort
- Some schools are doing away with officers in the schools
- Other schools are lessening the offenses of what is deemed worthy of a suspension
- The reduction of racial inequalities could begin by changing the ways school punish students with suspension (Barnes & Motz, 2018)

For Profit Prison Systems

Sydney Coleman

What is the for-profit prison system?

- In the 1980's The War on Drugs and harsher sentencing policies fueled a rapid expansion in the nation's prison population.
  - The resulting burden on the public sector led to the modern emergence of for-profit private prisons in many states and at the federal level.
- Of the 1.5 million people in state and federal prisons in 2016, 8.5 percent, or 128,063, were incarcerated in private prisons.
- The largest private prison corporations, Core Civic and GEO Group, collectively manage over half of the private prison contracts in the United States with combined revenues of $3.5 billion as of 2015.
- In order to make money as a private prison, they receive a stipend from the government to house each prisoner.

For-Profit Prison Systems and People Of Color

- The For Profit prison system remains functional based on a constant stream of inmates coming in to their prisons.
- The school to prison pipeline is a source of many prisoners for the for profit prison system and somehow with only 17% of the overall youth population being children of color, 34% of suspensions and 45% of juvenile arrests are of children of color.
- This pipeline is a depiction of racial disparity found in policy shifts from education to incarceration. This feeds the stereotype that people of color are dangerous and will end up in this cycle.
- The racial disparity is not just found in schools, but in prisons, 1 in 3 black men and 1 in 6 Latino men spend time in prison compared to the 1 in 17 white men. Black men spend an average of 20 percent longer in prison for the same crimes as white men.

Websites Offering Ways to Support and Education on this Cause and How to Dismantle It

- Sources such as the website Abolish Private Prisons offer information on why the For Profit prison system should be dismantled, and specifically how it harms communities of people of color and is the equivalent to “modern slavery,”
- There is also the option of donating in order to not only support prisoners, but in order to fund groups and organizations working towards getting rid of the for-profit prison system.

Historical Overview

- The relationship between Black women and the state was birthed in violence.
- Going back to the days during slavery, Black women would be beaten, mutilated, sexually assaulted, and even killed by slave holders for innocent reasons.
- In 1807 there was more of an increase of the death of Black women because of the ban of the importation of Africans, which the law provided little support from ( Jacobs, 2017).
- The law also began to reflect the normative view that Black women were not civilized enough to be brought within the bounds of the protective law.
- Public benefits law, educational law, delinquency and neglect policy, and all aspects of criminal law have embedded the stereotypes as the normative foundation for how government evaluates, judges, and punishes Black women.

Present Day Statistics ( Did you Know)

- There is an expectation that between 2.4 and 5.4 Black women and girls will be killed by the police during the life course per 100,00 at current rates ( Edwards, 2019).
- The racist mythology of black women having a lack in femininity, continue to appear in the press well after slavery ended making this an excuse for police officers to man handle, beat, and mistreat Black women.
- The reason for the lack of the highlight of violence amongst Black women is the community self censure as it did with the racism/sexism in both law enforcement and the media.
- It has become so hard to discuss this matter through the media because of the lack of attention the topic receives through the media. Time after time, we are receiving less and less news on police brutality and killing of Black women.

The Effect on Our Community

Stigma

- There continues to be a stigma associated with African American women where we are being seen as the stigma that the society believes ( angry, violent, aggressive, and uneducated)

Disrespect

- The disrespect that Black women continue to receiving sexually, ethically, and physically has been something that has not been highlighted through media enough for the awareness to be out to the public.

Dehumanization

- As dehumanization comes with the definition of depriving people of their basic human rights, Black women continue to have their rights ignored and misused as we are continuously judged for our existence.

It's Time for a Change

- As we move forward, the first step to making a change is being the change. More awareness toward Black and Brown women being killed by the police needs to be highlighted in all ways so that the message can be spread.
- Movements such as #BlackLivesMatter, #MeToo Movement, and #SayHerName are only the first steps towards the world being aware to this problem being present.
- Policies such as the The Public Policy continues to be a macro leveled resource that is being used to advocate the civil rights that are associated with the dehumanization that is occurring with Black and brown women.

The fight is not just being able to keep breathing. The fight is actually to be able to walk down the street with your head held high — and feel like I belong here, or I deserve to be here, or I just have [a] right to have a level of dignity.

—Alicia Garza, civil rights activist, cofounder of Black Lives Matter movement, 2015†
